Over the side board in the dining-room hangs portrait of Thomas Weld of Lulworth, in the green uniform of the Dorsetshire Rangers he was always accustomed to don when George III came to Weymouth. He was probably wearing it when he boldly asked the King's permission, in the course of a friendly conversation on the Esplanade, to bring the exiled priests and nuns to England, and received the characteristic answer. "The English people are generous and the Penal Laws will assuredly not be enforced against persons in distress seeking an asylum on our shores." His son Humphrey settled down to a country life at Chideock, wh re he drilled the Volunteers, welcomed the foreign refugees and converted the old " priest's cottage" into a commodious residence. The Lombardian chapel, the green persionnes, and the tall cypresses savour rather of the Italian villa than a Dorsetshire manor: but the cawing of the rooks in the groves of elms and chestnuts outside quickly dissipates the illusion and there is son ething unmistakeably English in the verdant lawn upon which you gaze as you stand in the bay-window of the diningroom, where the grave face of Cardinal Wold of It is again a sincere pleasure to record that San Marcello and the smiling eyes of his genial though our population was increased during father look down on the glass case in which Fre the year by about 20,000 immigrants, chiefly derick Weld preserves with religious care the Chinese, the year under review was marked by a plaid worn by Charles Edward Stuart at Culsingular absence of serious crime. He devoted the whole of his constitutional energy to what Lord Bucon very antly called "the heroic work of Colonisation; and when New Zealand obtained self-government Frederick Weld was returned to the House of Representatives. In seven years the vounteer son of a family of nine had saved enough to enable him to keep two hunters when he paid his first visit to England. One of the most memorable events of his life was the ascent of the Mouna Loa volcano, in the Sandwich Islands, during the great eruption of 1855-5%. Three years later he married the daughter of Mr. Ambrose Phillipps de Lisle of Garendon Park and Grace Dien, and on returning to New Zosland with his wife became Minister for | Native Affairs. In 1864 the Colony was fast drifting into bankruptcy, the Ministry resigned in despair, and Parliament met without a cabinet. occupied fortified positions in sight of the capital, Frederick Weld threw himself at once into the breach. The "Weld policy" was one of retrenchment, conciliation, and self-reliance. It encountered at first the flercest opnosition. but in the end it was so thoroughly successful that, when the Prime Minister of New Zealand came home to recruit his health in 1868, he was offered the Governorship of Western Australia, where Imperial expenditure was being gradually diminished. During the next eighteen vedrs it was the province of Sir Frederick Wold to assist in the material development of such important dependencies of the Crown as Western Australia, Tasmania, and the Straits Settlements. He left each Colony in a far more prosperous condition than it was when the wisdom of the clonial Office committed it to his charge; and great was the lamentation at Singapore when eighteen months ago, he addressed "the honourable gentlemen of the Legislative Counil" for the last time in the capacity of Governor.
